e-Census 2020 gets underway

Times News Service

MUSCAT: The Electronic Census Project of Population, Housing and Establishment 2020 personnel yesterday began visiting private sector institutions in all governorates, as per the guidelines of National Centre for Statistics and Information (NCSI).

The programme aims to update and complete the data needed to link addresses of enterprises and employees to electricity account numbers. This includes linking the addresses of establishments and the employees with their electricity account number, and to link workers data with the address of their workplaces and accommodations as well. In addition to linking addresses of the expatriate families with their electricity accounts numbers in order to prove their geographical locations.

The launch confirms the importance of identifying the geographical distribution of population, housing and establishments for setting national plans and strategies serving the objectives of Oman Vision 2040.

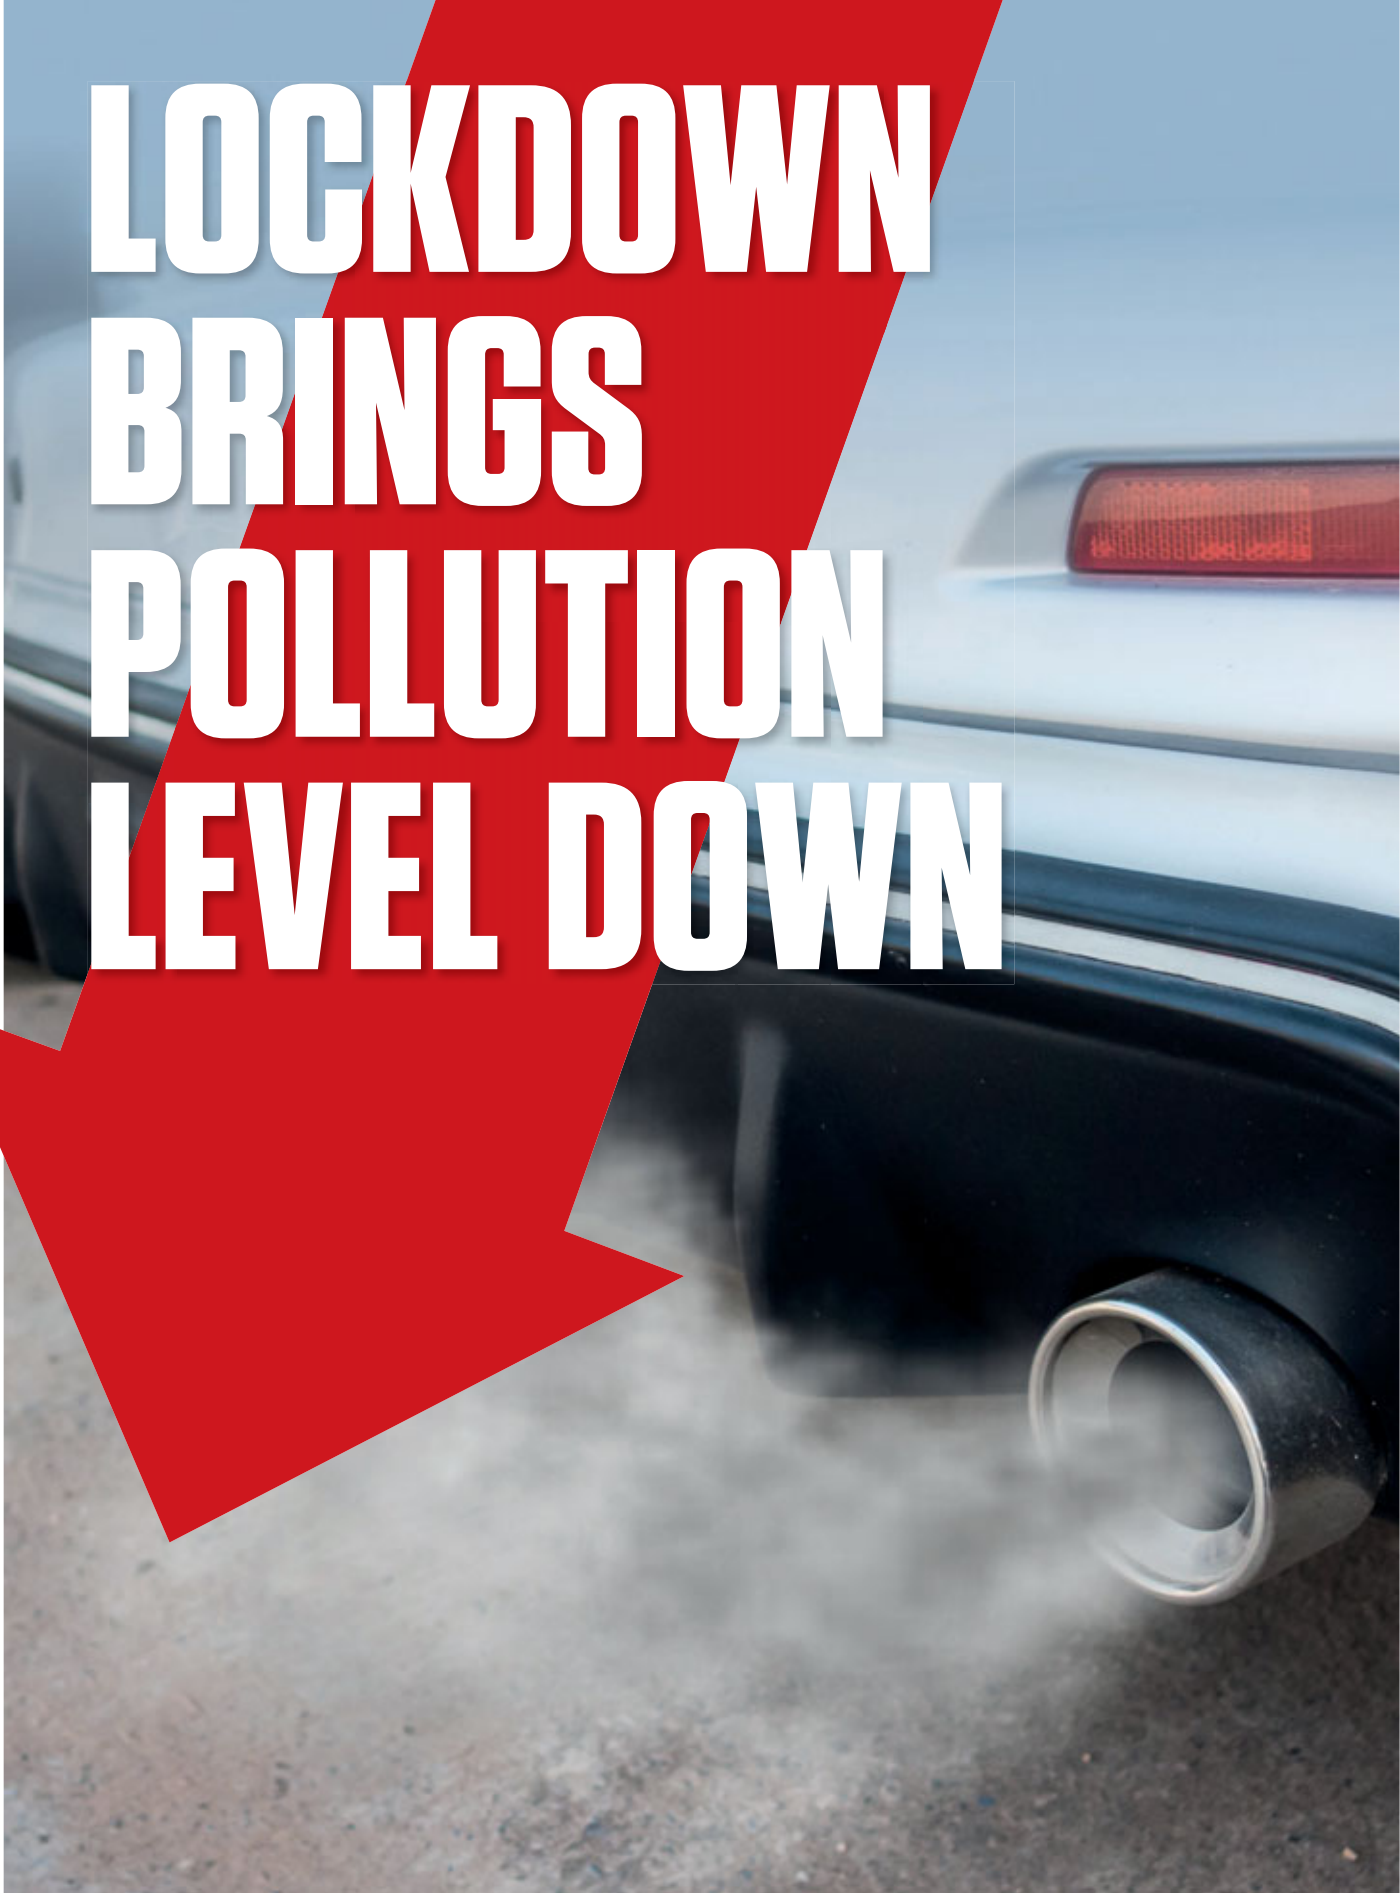

Linking the electricity account numbers to the population, housing and establishments' database will also serve the mechanisms of the new addressing system, the mechanisms of documenting rental contracts, and will help in organising the collective housing of expatriate workforce as well as enhancing the planning process for providing basic public services and facilities such as hospitals, schools, and other components of infrastructure.

In the Electronic Census 2020 project, the Sultanate has chosen to use electricity account information as a tool to prove the individuals' and establishments' address, due to its accuracy and coverage.

Closure of commercial activities has led to drop in harmful gases in the environment

Times News Service

MUSCAT: A decrease in the level of harmful carbon-based and other pollutants has been noticed during the lockdown to stop the spread of COVID-19 in Oman.

A new study, conducted by the Sultanate's Environment Authority, shows significant drops in the levels of key pollutants such as sulphur dioxide, nitrogen dioxide, carbon monoxide, and suspended particulate matter.

The authority, represented by the Directorate General of Environmental Affairs, analysed the air quality in three areas of Muscat: Al Khuwair, Mawaleh, and Wattayah. Levels of nitrogen dioxide were found to have dropped by 82 per cent in Wattayah, while South Al Mawaleh saw an overall decrease in impurities, ranging from 1.6 to 71.7 per cent for the various pollutants included in the study. Sulphur dioxide levels in Al Khuwair decreased by 36 per cent.

The study evaluated pollutant data from two periods: the first being before the arrival of the pandemic, in July 2019, and the second after its arrival, in April 2020.

The causes of pollution, such as economic activities, overpopulation, and vehicular traffic, were also analysed.

The authority said in its report, "Measurements of the concentration of gaseous emissions were taken from monitoring stations to study air quality, and the results and figures have shown a significant decrease in pollutant concentrations during the coronavirus pandemic as a result of the decisions of the Supreme Committee, the most important of which was the closure of Muscat Governorate and the halting of schools and commercial activities."

"This, in turn, was reflected in a broad decline in traffic and other activities," added the report.

"It must be noted that transportation alone contributes to up to 23 per cent of global carbon emissions, motor vehicle emissions amount to 72 per cent and air transport causes 11 per cent of the total global emissions of greenhouse gases from the transport sector."

To reduce the spread of the disease, the Governorate of Muscat entered a lockdown from April 10 to May 29.

Wilayat of Muttrah, where many of the first cases of COVID-19 in the country were recorded, was placed under isolation from April 1 to June 6.

Soon after the arrival of the pandemic in Oman, most commercial activities were temporarily closed, while schools were required to transition to online modes of learning, and many offices told their staff to work from home. >A4

Masirah sees big drop in loggerhead turtle nesting population

Times News Service

MUSCAT: Masirah Island, one of the finest and largest nesting grounds of loggerhead turtles in the world, has some grim news for this marine species.

A study conducted over a period of 30 years on the population trend of loggerhead turtles shows that there has been a 79 per cent decline in the nesting population on the Masirah island, hitherto, one of the largest nesting grounds of these turtles in the world.

Various collaborative partners including the Environment Society of Oman (ESO), Environment Authority in Oman (former Ministry of Environment and Climate Affairs), United States Fish and Wildlife Service, United States National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration - National Marine Fisheries Service, and Five Oceans Environmental Services LLC, have announced the publication of a scientific paper, a major milestone in an extensive study on Oman's loggerhead turtle population.

Suaad Al Harthi, ESO's Executive Director, said, "Although no trend analysis was completed for the other marine turtle species in Oman, we assume they are also at risk of decline, being exposed to the same threats from land and sea-based disturbances, yet there is still hope."

"We must continue, as a community, to raise awareness, to carry out our outreach activities, and to advocate for the protection of our precious marine turtle populations, and make sure that the Sultanate continues to be a really important stronghold for turtles".

Dr. Thuraya Al Sariri, Assistant Director General of Conservation at the Environment Authority in Oman, added, "It is only with proper regulation, management and conservation measures, along with strong cooperation with all concerned authorities and the involvement of the local community, that we can be successful in conserving our natural resources, and ensuring that they are still around for future generations."

"The reasons for the current population trend are many, some of which are in the high seas beyond Oman's immediate control, but by making sure we are doing our best in Oman, at least the females will have somewhere safe to nest and the hatchlings will be given a good start in life. >A4

WHERE: Surrounded by the Al Hajar mountain range, Rustaq is in Al Batinah region and earlier was the capital of Oman.

WHAT'S SPECIAL: There are two important architectural landmarks in Rustaq —the Hazm Castle and the Rustaq Fort. While Hazm Castle was built in the early 18th century, Rustaq Fort dates back to the 13th century. Rustaq Fort is nestled between four tall towers and has its own falaj water system.

Rustaq is also known for its healing warm springs, Ain Al Kasafa being the most popular one. One can also see abundant date palm groves and aflaj. Wadi Bani Ghafar, Wadi Al Sahtan and Wadi Bani Awf are the three popular wadis. Rustaq's wildlife nature reserve is home to more than 110 species of plants and animals.

LIVELIHOOD: While people of Rustaq have different sources of livelihood, one of the main occupations is beekeeping. One can get the best quality of honey from Rustaq. Sale of Omani halwa is also quite common here. One can find fruits like apricots, plums, pomegranates and grapes, brought from Jabal Akhdar, being sold in the local markets here. Maintaining their traditional craft, people in Rustaq are also into weaving baskets made of date palm.

LOCAL MARKET: Rustaq Souq is one of the oldest markets in the Sultanate. Being the central market it is visited by people from the nearby villages.

ENDANGERED SPECIES

< FROM A1 More efforts should be made to save loggerhead turtles

“The Authority recognises the urgency of the situation and urges everyone to redouble their efforts to save this globally important population of turtles,” Dr Al Sariri further said.

Oman is home to five of the seven species of turtles found in the world, all of which are endangered to various degrees on the IUCN Red List of Threatened Species and face high risk of extinction in the wild.

“A variety of disturbances like coastal development, light pollution and beach driving, accidental capture in fishing nets (bycatch), ghost fishing, plastic pollution and climate change, all impact both the habitat and population numbers.

Through our research, monitoring, and satellite tracking, we are starting to build up a better idea of how the loggerheads from Masirah are being affected and this will help the authorities to develop plans for protected areas and strategic conservation management action moving forward,” added Andrew Willson, Senior Marine Consultant at Five Oceans Environmental Services LLC. The scientific paper is published in the journal Frontiers in Marine Science and can be accessed through this link: <https://tinyurl.com/y3x26l79>

As the country's only non-profit organisation dedicated to the environment, ESO has spent the last 16 years working to protect Oman's environment through education, awareness and conservation. Various funds will support ESO to carry out a dedicated net clean-up campaign in 2021 on Masirah Island. But it needs much more support to continue its vital work. To make a donation, or to find out other ways to get involved, visit www.eso.org.om

POSITIVE IMPACT

< FROM A1 ‘Closure for COVID-19 improved environment’

Many economic activities have since resumed, as part of a series of measures planned to reopen commercial activities under certain restrictions aimed at stopping the spread of the disease.

“This study comes after the decisions of the Supreme Committee for dealing with COVID-19 which required that people adhere to home isolation to prevent the spread of the virus,” said the study.

“This affected social life and mobility, but in turn had a positive impact on the environment, with the imposition of closure measures and the activation of checkpoints between governorates.”

“The measures put in place to stop COVID-19 in all the countries of the world have led to the restoration of the environment to normalcy, according to many reports issued by various environmental institutions and global organisations,” it added.

The study conducted by the Environment Authority in the Sultanate was aimed at knowing the extent of the change in ambient air quality during the pandemic, and to measure the impact of population and transportation activities on emissions of air pollutants in the Sultanate, based on the readings collected from the three stations that were placed in these areas.

The report noted that “This environmental recovery is not limited to just the pollutants mentioned in this study. There are other aspects such as carbon emissions and greenhouse gases, which according to international reports, have decreased significantly as a result of the coronavirus pandemic.” However, the study found that while it was good to see this decline, this drop in pollution levels is not permanent. Efforts must therefore be taken to work on programmes that help permanently decrease pollution levels and preserve the country's natural resources.

‘No sign of life’ under Beirut blast rubble, say rescue workers

The search for survivors began after a sniffer dog deployed by the rescue team detected a scent beneath a collapsed building

BEIRUT: A Chilean rescue team in Beirut said on Saturday that there was no longer any sign of life underneath a building that collapsed in last month's explosion, ending a three-day search for missing survivors.

About 50 rescue workers and volunteers combed through most of the collapsed building in the city's heavily damaged Gemmayzeh neighborhood.

The search for survivors began after a sniffer dog deployed by the rescue team on Wednesday detected a scent beneath the collapsed building.

The next day, high-tech sensors confirmed an apparent pulse beneath the rubble, raising hopes of a miracle among the Lebanese.

"Sadly, today we can say that technically we have no sign of life inside the building," said Francesco Lermenda, head of the volunteer group Topos Chile.

"We have checked 95% of the building, and the only part that is missing is the sidewalk, which is also full of rubble," Lermenda said late Saturday. "There could be a dead body, but we haven't found it."

He said two rescuers went down a final tunnel to check the last air pocket where there could possibly be any survivors but found nobody there.

The sensors may have picked up breaths of fellow rescuers already inside the building, Lermenda said, adding that the efforts would now focus on clearing the rubble and finding remains.

"We never stop with even 1% of hope (of finding a body)," he said. "We never stop until the job is done."

'It's scary'
The area where the search was being carried out was among the hardest hit by the blast and home to many old buildings that were crumbled by the shockwaves.

Rescue workers said the search had to go at a slow pace since the damaged building was at risk of complete collapse.

The area where the search was being carried out was among the hardest hit by the blast and home to many old buildings that were crumbled by the shockwaves

"The building is really crumbling, it's scary and there's a lot of danger to the team," said Abou Moussa, head of operations at the Lebanese civil defence agency.

Beirut was struck by a devastating explosion that ripped through the city on August 4, killing some 190 people and injuring 6,000 others, making it the country's worst peacetime disaster.

The country observed a minute's silence for the dead on Friday.

The blast was triggered by huge quantity of ammonium nitrate poorly stored in a warehouse at the city's port.

Lebanon is already facing its worst economic crisis in decades and is reeling under the coronavirus pandemic which has made matters worse.

Experts from Chile, France, and the United States have offered Lebanon help as the country lacks the tools and expertise to handle advanced search and rescue operations. dw

BELARUS
Tens of thousands defy threats and march in Minsk

MINSK: Tens of thousands of people rallied in the Belarusian capital, Minsk, on Sunday despite warnings of a heavy-handed response by authorities.

Protesters carrying red-and-white flags and chanting slogans against strongman President Alexander Lukashenko gathered as police deployed armored personnel carriers and water cannons.

According to DW correspondents at the scene, heavy vehicles and mobile water cannons have been rolling through Minsk since the early morning.

Security forces, some heavily armed, were seen taking up positions and surrounding the centrally located Independence Square.

The Interior Ministry warned: "We turn to the citizens and guests of our country! Do not take part in the non-sanctioned mass events. This is against the law! The police will take necessary actions to prevent such actions being carried out and will not allow violations of public order."

Dozens detained
Earlier, police arrested dozens of protesters, with Viasna rights group releasing a list of 37 protesters it said had been detained.

DW correspondents said most of the protesters congregated on the Victors Avenue and were marching towards the Minsk Hero City Obelisk in Independence Square. Protesters were confined to the avenue, with side streets blocked off by police. Several nearby subway stations have been closed.

Local media reported widespread problems with mobile internet in Minsk, with one of the largest mobile operators of the country, A1 announcing that restrictions were put in place on the order of "authorized state bodies."

Clashes in Hrodno
A video showed protesters in the city of Hrodno hit with what appeared to be tear gas, followed by scuffles with police.

People have been protesting for weeks in Belarus, calling for Lukashenko's resignation. He claims to have won the August 9 elections with an 80% margin after ruling the former Soviet country for 26 years. Opposition figure Svetlana Tikhanovskaya, who says she is the rightful winner of the election, fled to Lithuania after a massive police crackdown.

Thousands of people have been arrested, with accusations of beatings and torture.

Journalists, including foreign media, have been caught up in the crackdown with frequent arbitrary arrests and harassment. dw

PROTESTS

CORONAVIRUS: The protesters called for an end to the wearing of masks, physical distancing and potential vaccinations against the illness.

Italian, Croatian govts criticise anti-corona protests

ROME: The capitals of Italy and Croatia were hit by protests against coronavirus-prevention measures on Saturday.

There was a protest of about 2,000 people in Rome organised by various groups. The protest called for an end to the wearing of masks, physical distancing and potential vaccinations against the illness. Some protesters said the country turned into a "health dictatorship."

Italian Prime Minister Giuseppe Conte expressed his displeasure with the protest. "We are dealing with an ongoing pandemic," Conte told an Italian news agency. "There is a demonstration in Rome today by people who believe it doesn't exist. We will answer them with data."

Foreign minister Luigi Di Maio said the protesters should show more respect to victims and their families. "I call on the coronavirus deniers to at least show respect for the families of the dead," said Di Maio during a speech in the southern city of Foggia.

Italy has recently seen its largest daily cases since early May. Health authorities on Saturday said there were more than 1,700 new cases on Friday.

Some Croatians also against new measures
Several thousand people also rallied against preventative measures in Zagreb on Saturday. They said the measures to prevent the spread of the novel coronavirus were a threat to their human rights and freedoms.

"COVID is a lie, we are not all covidiot," said some protesters, referencing what some people have called those who do not follow prevention measures.

"We insist on safeguarding human rights, freedoms, knowledge, solidarity and mutual respect," read a statement from the group that organized the event, dubbed the Festival of Freedom.

Croatian authorities were not pleased with Saturday's rally. "All temporary restrictions had only one goal — to protect the health and lives of Croatian citizens. We succeeded in that," said Health Minister Vili Beros in a Facebook post.

The country has implemented rules that demand that people wear facemasks while on public transportation and in shops since mid-July. After the summer months with very few daily cases, Croatia has seen its highest number of daily cases. The nation of 4.2 million people saw a daily record 369 new cases on Thursday.

The protests come after two large protests against virus-stemming measures took place in Berlin last month. dw

COMMENTARY

Agriculture rally continues despite dollar strength

Ole S. Hansen

JUST like the stock market, the commodity sector ran into profit-taking this past week. Following six consecutive weeks of gains, the Bloomberg Commodity Index lost 1 per cent with the main driver being the abrupt turnaround in the dollar. The Greenback received a bid, especially against the euro, after responding to a “line in the sand” comment from the European Central Bank when the EURUSD reached €1.20, the highest since May 2018. Crude oil saw a long-overdue expansion to the downside of the recent tight range after demand recovery concerns, the upcoming refinery maintenance season and the stronger dollar helped trigger some profit-taking. Gold’s failure to reclaim $2,000/oz led to selling as the dollar suddenly strengthened and yields moved higher in response to better-than-expected US economic data. While gasoline demand has recovered, a glut of distillates such as diesel and jet fuel, both unavoidable products in the process of producing gasoline, saw ULSD Diesel drop to the bottom of this week’s leaderboard.

The agriculture sector rose again, albeit at a slower pace than the previous three weeks. Weather concerns, the overall weaker dollar, strong Chinese demand for key crops and the economic recovery following the Q1 collapse have all supported the sector. The top five commodities this past week all belonged to the agriculture sector with coffee out in front followed by soybeans and wheat. Gold traded lower but within its established range as the dollar became the main source of inspiration for traders. However, some signs that the metal was running low on fuel emerged after it failed its attempt to break back above $2,000/oz. Despite support from a weaker dollar and 10-year US real yields hitting record lows, the focus quickly turned to the search for support which was found ahead of $1900/oz. The ugly all-day slide in US equities on Thursday was all but ignored by the wider market. The 5 per cent drop in the Nasdaq only reversed a few days’ worth of gains while occurring at a time where many of the mega-cap technology stocks had reached valuations difficult to justify by most metrics. Only an accelerated sell-off in stocks could begin to negatively impact gold. To cover losses elsewhere traders may, just like a brief period back in March, turn to gold-selling to access liquidity. With gold having failed to benefit from the aforementioned tailwinds earlier in the week, the short-term outlook points to a prolonged period of consolidation and potentially a bigger correction than what we have witnessed so far. To determine the direction, the focus will stay with the dollar and the direction of US real yields. As per the chart below the three lower highs is a concern and it may signal the need for a deeper correction as short term longs exit the market looking for better entry levels. Crude oil was dragged lower by weaker margins as refineries struggled with an overhang of unwanted distillates such as diesel and jet fuel. Adding to this the mentioned dollar strength and some lingering concerns about the current pace of demand recovery. Something that was reflected in weaker time-spreads. An example being the spread between the first and the second WTI crude oil futures contract which reached its widest level since June. The cost of transporting crude oil on the Middle East to China benchmark route dropped to the lowest since

May 2018 on signs that Chinese demand was slowing following a record buying spree since the March/April price collapse. The risk of a near-term price weakness also saw demand for downside protection rise with WTI put volumes rising to the highest since mid-June. From a trading perspective, the break below the uptrend from June may signal a prolonged period of sideways trading with the downside risk initially limited to the low 40’s. An extended stock market correction and/or further dollar strength may together with negative COVID-19 developments pose the biggest threat to our expectations for higher oil prices towards the end of the year and into 2021.

Ole S. Hansen is the head of Commodity Strategy, Saxo Bank.
